

THE STRANGE CASE OF DR JEKYLL AND MR HYDE.

Now, years later, I realize that my life has been an admirable one, but it has certainly been a fraudulent one. No one but me knows my true nature. All these years, the public has seen only a veneer of my real self. No one could guess what degrading things I have done secretly, things which I must say in all honesty, I enjoyed very much. And yet I do not consider myself a hypocrite, for man has a dual nature. The professional, respectable side of my character is as much a part of me as is the side that has enjoyed to the fullest my secret "irregularities."

Extract from The Strange Case of Dr Jekyll and Mr Hyde. by Stevenson, 1886.

1. Underline all the negative adjectives.
2. ~~Cross~~ all the positive adjectives.
3. Whose point of view is this extract written in?

---

---

---

---

4. Do you think Dr Jekyll has lost his mind? Why? Why not?

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

---

